What I don't want
What I do want.

Work for the man where I make a negligible difference.

I do want flexible work where I make a difference in our world and can work creatively with the ability to earn a better living with extra effort.

To be cranky all the time and impatient with my children.

I do want enough time to work and clean so that I'm not distracted and can give them my undivided attention.

Have a dirty house and be tripping over things all the time.

I do want a weekly clean of the house. Either standing babysitter or house cleaner so that it always gets completed.

Unkind children.

I do want to ensure Deakon has mostly positive influences.

To smoke b4 4 and hide it.

I do want to have clear headed days and relaxing evenings where i can start being more honest about my habits.

To be unhealthy and overweight with no energy.

I do want a healthy lifestyle and more willpower.

To feel incapable.

I do want to Learn stuff and not feel intimidated.

What is self-reliance and self-sufficiency?

 What is self reliance

- * What is self sufficiency
- * Why would you want to be self reliant
- * Why would you want to be self sufficient
- * What are degrees of self sufficiency
- * What is healthy interdependence
- * Why are concepts like self sufficiency part of our nation at its core
- * How much self sufficiency do you want
- * How much self reliance do you have, are you deceiving yourself and have you tested yourself
- * How have we lost touch with the innate desire for self sufficiency and reliance
- * How can you apply these concepts to your daily lifestyle

Put yourself in a place where food doesn't come from the store...

Jack Spiriko talks of the difference and it boils down to the planning process.

When people see what's wrong in the world or the flaws in the "systems" that support them, they often feel overwhelmed to tackle it all. However, we all have a journey to follow and practically speaking, modern preparedness makes you non-fragile for whatever comes at you.

We are to design our lives to be withstanding through the tough times. The actions we take and steps we make towards resiliency or away from it are rooted in the life we build.

You plan for all of it. We set up two things:

Self sufficiency—it's measured in percentage. We will never hit 100%.

If I have a sustainable homestead and a local food system, I am self-reliant for a time. We think about feed needs for animal husbandry, water needs etc.

Food self reliant six months on copy canning.

Self reliance

Self reliance is measured in time.

Your ability to rely on what you have without outside support for a time.

Example. Battery life for light. Gas storage for generator. Meals in the pantry? Measured in a finite time—when will it run out?

 Does the looming economic collapse scare you and you want to take positive steps toward getting your family prepared? We build online courses to help you out of the rabbit hole and into peace of mind.

 In 2011 I learned how the economy functions and quickly came to the realization that a collapse was inevitable. The 2008 financial crisis was propped up in such a way that in my eyes, we were going to see a major depression in my lifetime...i was only 25. I wanted a family so I built my life accordingly to gain the experience and tools necessary to not only thrive despite unfavourable outlooks, but to lead individuals into freedom. Offering courses to help others increase their self-sufficiency, manage food sovereignty, engage with community development principles and find peace of mind from the fear is the most rewarding experience.

 I've spent the last 17 years preparing for this moment in time. Where I could not only offer people the value of my education in Community Development to shine a light on grassroots mechanisms for change, but I also offer over a decade of daily experience pursuing knowledge in modern preparedness through the teachings of experts like Jack Spirko of The Survival Podcast, John Bush of Live Free Now & Many more positive voices in the preparedness world. At Parrs Jars we have above part solutions focused on empowerment of the individual and a solution oriented approach to make a lasting impact on the world.
